PROFITABLE POLITENESS.

The Boston Traveller, in commenting on the prevalence of rudeness, tells the following incident that happened some years ago: There was a very plainly-dressed elderly lady who was a frequent customer at the then leading dry-goods store in Boston. No one in the store knew her even by name. All the clerks but one avoided her and gave their attention to those who were better dressed and more pretentious. The exception was a young man who had a conscientious regard for duty and system. He never left another customer to wait on the lady, but when at liberty he waited on her with as much attention as though she had been a princess. This continued a year or two, until the young man became of age. One morning the lady approached the young man, when the following conversation took place:

Lady—"Young man, do you wish to go into business for yourself?"

"Yes, ma'am," he responded, "but I have neither money, credit, nor friends, nor will any one trust me."

"Well," continued the lady, "you go and select a good situation, ask what the rent is, and report to me," handing the young man her address. The young man went, found a capital location, a good store, but the landlord required security, which he could not give. Mindful of the lady's request, he forthwith went to her and reported.

"Well," she replied, "you go and tell Mr. W. Franklin Creighton, that I will be responsible."

He went, and the landlord or agent was surprised but the bargain was closed. The next day the lady called to ascertain the result. The young man told, but added, "What am I to do for goods? No one will trust me."

"You may go and see Mr. —, and Mr. —, and Mr. —, and tell them to call on me."

He did, and his store was soon stocked with the best goods in the market. There are many in this city who remember the circumstance and the man. He died many years since, and left a fortune of $300,000. So much for politeness, so much for civility, and so much for treating one's elders with the deference due to age, in whatever garb they are clothed.

THE USE OF THE DIVINING ROD.—Messrs. Pass & Towney, of Bristol, England, communicated to the Naturalist. Society the results of an investigation made by them into the curious superstition attending the use of the divining rod.

As the use of this instrument is in no way means obsolete in our own country, it may be worth while to state that Messrs. Pass & Towney were successful in obtaining the attendance of two reputed operators, and both expressed themselves willing and able to find the money which the authors were to conceal. The conjurors maintained that the instrument was available not only in the field, but in the mine, and that they could by it detect metal wherever placed. An English shilling being placed under some one of a series of objects, such as hats and handkerchiefs, lying on the floor, the master of the divining rod, or "dowsing fork," guaranteed to find it if there were no disturbing causes. When asked what the latter might be, he stated springs of water or minerals under the house. He was, therefore, first of all to explore the room as a preliminary matter, and ascertain that there were no indications of water or minerals under the house. The first attempt to discover the location of the hidden coin was successful, but under such circumstances as to show that it was a matter of accident, and the operator refused to repeat the experiment a second time, even for a sovereign. The other diviner, a less expert person, seemed to have failed in three successive cases, and when he finally succeeded the conditions were such as to show the whole of his audience, most of whom were ignorant and prone to assent to the belief in the divining rod, that the operator was guided by no occult influences, but was merely guessing his way along. It was evident, in fact, that there was no mystery in the whole matter, and that there is as much deception in the use of the divining rod as ever practiced by the medicine men of the savage tribes. The use of the forked rod for the purpose of finding minerals, springs, and in fact, every possible variety of desiderata seems to have been handed down to us from the middle ages.

THE MUSEUMS OF LILLE.—A correspondent of the London Times, writing of the visit of the French Association to Lille, says:

"Lille is particularly rich in museums and galleries. For instance, the Ethnologic, Industrial and Ceramic galleries, which, with the famous Musée Wicar and its priceless collections of original drawings by old masters, are under the same roof as the association meeting rooms; and in these members found objects germane to their studies. But a greater attraction was found in the Retrospective Museum of Religious Art, which closed on this day, and would have been dispersed last week but for the meeting of the association."

This loan collection, embracing all that has been done by art as handmaiden to religion, is now formed with a view to increase the building fund of the new cathedral, dedicated to the local patroness, Notre Dame de la Treille. There are monuments and relics of medieval art, to the number of 3,000, classed in twenty sections; manuscripts, engravings, church vestments, terra cotta, carving, metal work, etc., constitute a perfect treasury of art applied to church use; it is unexcelled in Arras and Lille tapestry and in gold and silver work. Even the Alsace-Lorraine loan exhibition in Paris is but second to it in these branches, and the Mecklenburg exhibition ten years ago was vastly inferior."

"A great curiosity is a selection of books, manuscripts, sheets and scores out of the selection which served M. de Coussemaker for his 'History of Music in the Middle Ages.' The copy of St. Thomas of Canterbury hangs beside Charles V's gold brocade mantle; the illuminated manuscripts range from the eighth century. The financial results have not altogether answered the expectations of its promoters; may be Lille was not ripe for it. In two months nearly 30,000 visitors entered—a small quota, indeed, in a city numbering 200,000 souls within itself and 1,500,000 within its surrounding districts. The costs arising from the carriage of the articles, an insurance upon an estimated value of three million francs, the fitting up of cases and rooms, daily and nightly attendance, and all such expenses, will leave the promoters on the threshold of bankruptcy."
